

James Holston, professor of anthropology at the University of California - Berkeley, gave a lecture titled "Right to the City, Right to Rights, and Insurgent Urban Citizenship," as part of the Mershon Center's Globalization, Institutions and Economic Security Workshop.

James Holston, professor of anthropology at the University of California - Berkeley, discussed rights as a basis for insurgent citizen movements using periphery communities in São Paulo as his case. Holston gave a lecture titled, "Right to the City, Right to Rights, and Insurgent Urban Citizenship" as part of the Mershon Center's Globalization, Institutions and Economic Security Workshop.

James Holston (center), professor of anthropology at the University of California - Berkeley, stands with Sarah Brooks (left), associate professor of political science at Ohio State, and Alex Thompson (right), associate professor of political science at Ohio State. Brooks and Thompson co-direct the Globalization, Institutions and Economic Security Workshop at the Mershon Center.